Proportionality Information

1. Have you examined whether the requirements under your national legal system are directly or indirectly discriminatory on the basis of nationality or residence?

Not because It is not requested neither the Italian citizenship and the Italian residence.

2. Which of the following overriding reasons relating to the general interest justifies the measure(s)?

- Other, please specify

Ensure the right and the know-how quality.

3. What specific risks or benefits have you identified that your measure(s) is designed to, respectively, minimise or maximise?

Please try to be specific in describing the nature of the risks/benefits you have identified.

Where you have selected more than one overriding reason relating to the general interest in question 2 please be sure to address each of these in your response. Wherever possible please include evidence.

The acquisition of the Magistral Degree and the Phd or the Magistral Degree Diploma with two years of research under the Universities or Public Authorities of research they are necessary to the scientific research development.

4. How specifically do your measures operate to minimise the risk(s) or maximise the benefit(s) identified in question 3?

When addressing this question please try to explain how the measures prevent the risks or guarantee the benefits.

Where you have selected more than one overriding reason relating to the general interest in question 2 please be sure to address each of these in your response. Wherever possible please include evidence.

Thanks to the regulation you can achieve improvements in the quality of life (researchers at public bodies) and the development of scientific research of the University and to the performance of official duties supplementary educational courses of instruction (Assistant Professor)

5. In so far as you are able, please provide information that you have gathered regarding the concrete effects of the measure(s).

For example, through impact assessments or information gathered during implementation or review of a measure. Member States who have recently undergone reforms may in particular be able to contribute helpfully to this field. Where you are able to provide cost-benefit analyses this would be particularly valuable.

Information on whether the measures indeed successfully prevented risks from being realised (e.g. the number of sanctions imposed, a drop in transgressions since the measure was introduced or consequences from previous modifications of the regulation) would equally be helpful.

Where you have selected more than one overriding reason relating to the general interest in question 2 please be sure to address each of these in your response. You may also wish to include evidence on consumer satisfaction or other measurements of the impact.

The researcher is the person who does research, as an activity finalized to discover, interpret and review the facts, events, behaviours or theories related to the nature using scientific methods.

6. Is the general interest objective you indicated in question 2 pursued in a consistent and systematic manner?

In approaching your response to this question please consider examples where you have addressed similar risks for comparable professions, not necessarily within the same sector. Is the approach you have adopted in this particular profession comparable or distinct from such similar cases and why?

There are not professions comparable to that one.

7. Please explain in how far the degree of complexity or the nature of the activities which are reserved justify that these activities can be exclusively performed by professionals possessing a specific professional qualification.

For example: when the tasks are essentially of a straightforward nature (such as preparing and printing pay slips etc.), or involve essentially the execution of instructions, specific professional aptitudes should not be required.

The researcher has the duty to do, promote, divulgate, transfer and enhancing research activities to the principal sectors of know-how development and their application for the scientific, technological, economic and social increment.

8. Where you have indicated several measures in place in the screening tab, have you reviewed the cumulative effect of all these measures on professional activities?
